

CLEAN-UP CREW: Dawson College cinema students Marley Sniatowsky, left, and Devin August Orenstein, right, both 18, were among the approximately 50 volunteers led by Teva-Quebec, a new Jewish environmental group, who helped pick up debris along the Lachine Canal as part of the TD Bank's Great Canadian Shoreline Clean-Up. They also videotaped the project for a documentary they are making through the Flyt Foundation, which encourages young people to be more community-minded. They are seen here with mentor Justin Lachance, an independent filmmaker and former Alberta CBC television producer.
